Rumiantsev S. ed.	Education and the Politics of Memory in Russia and Eastern Europe	Routledge	2025	307	The book Education and the Politics of Memory in Russia and East-Central Europe, edited by Sergey Rumyantsev, explores the intersection of education, history, and memory politics in post-Soviet states, specifically Russia, Ukraine, Armenia, and Azerbaijan. It examines how national historical narratives have been shaped through formal education and extracurricular activities over the past 30 years, particularly in response to geopolitical conflicts and national identity formation. Structured into three parts, the book discusses patriotic education, the role of historical myths in textbooks, and the broader politics of memory. It highlights how memory politics has been used to foster nationalism, shape public discourse, and legitimize political ideologies. The research underscores the tension between state-controlled historical narratives and alternative perspectives, illustrating how education systems contribute to collective memory construction and national myth-making.

					The book explores the intricate relationship between national memory and identity, emphasizing the role of narratives in shaping collective understandings of the past. Central themes include: Narrative as a Framework for Memory: Wertsch highlights how nations use structured stories to construct a shared sense of history. These narratives are not neutral; they selectively emphasize certain events while omitting others to sustain national identity and political objectives. National memory and conflict: The book deals with how competing narratives between nations can lead to mnemonic standoffs, as exemplified by differing accounts of World War II or the atomic bombings of Japan. Such disagreements often stem from deeply ingrained worldviews resistant to evidence or counterarguments. State power in shaping memory: National memory is supported and propagated by state mechanisms, such as education systems, public commemorations, and media. This state backing distinguishes it from other forms of collective memory. Memory as a tool of nationalism: The resurgence of nationalism globally underscores the power of national memory in mobilizing populations. Historical narratives are wielded to foster unity or justify exclusionary policies, as seen in instances of populist movements. Dialogism and narrative complexity: The book draws on Mikhail Bakhtin's concept of dialogism, showing how national memories are not monolithic but involve a dialogue of overlapping and conflicting stories.

Wijermars M.	Memory Politics in Contemporary Russia	Routledge	2019	257	The book explores the role of memory politics in post-Soviet Russia, focusing on the interaction between state and non-state actors in shaping historical narratives. The author argues that memory politics is not solely dictated by the Kremlin but involves a broader societal dynamic where cultural and political elites contribute to shaping and contesting historical representations. Through an analysis of television and cinema from 2000 to 2012, the study highlights how the Russian state mobilizes cultural memory to reinforce national identity and political legitimacy. Notably, the government strategically employs historical myths, such as the Time of Troubles and the legacy of figures like Petr Stolypin, to frame contemporary governance as a continuation of Russia's historical trajectory. However, the book also emphasizes that media productions sometimes introduce ambiguities and alternative interpretations, complicating state efforts to impose a uniform historical narrative. By incorporating case studies and interdisciplinary analysis, the book provides a nuanced understanding of how memory is constructed, contested, and instrumentalized in contemporary Russia. It sheds light on the evolving relationship between media, politics, and public perception in shaping national history.

Ziębińska-Witek Anna	Historia w muzeach. Studium ekspozycji Holokaustu	Wydawnictwo UMCS: Lublin	2011	292	Book (Polish), the Holocaust and its representations in museums (in Poland and around the world) became for the author the subject of insightful analyses, shedding new light on the theory of the museum as an institution and on the representation of the Holocaust (HOWEVER, remember that since 2011 many expositions in Holocaust museums were changed).
Ziębińska-Witek Anna	Recovered Roots: Collective Memory and the Making of Israeli National Tradition	Chicago; London: The University of Chicago	1995	360	The book examines three events that became important in creation of modern Zionism as an ideology and a basis for Israeli national identity: the defence of Masada against the Romans in 73 C.E., the Bar Kokhba revolt of 133-135, and the 1920 battle of Tel Hai. The author shows how, in each of these cases, Israeli memory transformed events that ended in death and defeat into heroic myths and symbols of national revival.

Arenhövel M.	Demokratie und Erinnerung: Der Blick zurück auf Diktatur und Menschenrechtsverbrechen	Frankfurt am Main; New York: Campus Verlag	2000	158	This study introduces the discussion about politics of the past and conflicts of memory. The author argues that reconciliation with culpable past is directly correlated with its "democratic consolidation" of the nation. He uses the examples of different countries, e.g. Germany, Italy, Japan, Chile, Yugoslavia, and Russia, as an illustration of this conclusion.
Bal M., Crewe J., Spitzer L., ed.	Acts of Memory: Cultural Recall in the Present	Hanover; London: Dartmouth College; University Press of New England	1999	XVII, 250	Interdisciplinary study consisting of tightly integrated essays that illustrate the active role of individual and cultural memory in tying the past to the present in sites ranging from Germany, Israel and the US to South Africa, Bolivia and Chili.
Booth W. J.	Communities of Memory: On Witness, Identity, and Justice	Ithaca; London: Cornell University Press	2006	XV, 247	This book studies the place of memory in politics, in the identity and ethics of political communities, and in their practices of justice. The author argues that memory, identity, and justice are tightly interwoven and that memory holds a defining place in determining how justice is done.
Daniłova N.	The Politics of War Commemoration in the UK and Russia	Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire: Palgrave Macmillan	2015	XV, 256	A key focus of the monograph is to compare modern aspects of war commemoration in the United Kingdom and in Russia. Chronologically the book covers the commemoration of conflicts that occurred since 1979 through 2014. Structurally it is divided into two main parts, which respectively explore the commemoration of fallen soldiers in both countries. Via studying the representations of fallen soldiers in the mass media, memorials, and ceremonies of remembrance the author showed how the existing commemorative discourses and practices "can potentially evoke nationalistic sentiments, normalise warfare and militarise societies at the cultural level".
Emler D.	La politique, l'histoire, la mémoire: Les usages politiques de la mémoire	Paris: L'Harmattan	2021	251	This book examines the issue of the political uses of the past in France in the 1990s and 2000s. It studies the interactions between politics and history (based on the analysis of "memory laws" and the reaction they provoked on the part of historians), between memory and politics (based on the analysis of the uses of memory in presidents' speeches) and between history and memory.
Fedor J., Kangaspuro M., Lassila J., Zhurbenko T., eds	War and Memory in Russia, Ukraine and Belarus	New York: Palgrave Macmillan	2017	XXVII, 506	This collection of essays analyzes how the memory of the Second World War shaped the commemorative space in Russia, Ukraine and Belarus. The authors of the volume study the mnemonic convergences and divergences of the memorial practices that have gradually established themselves in these three post-Soviet countries.
Jarausch K., Lindenberger T., eds.	Conflicted Memories. Europeanizing Contemporary Histories	Oxford: Berghahn Books	2007	XII, 293	This collection of essays volume focus on the development of a shared conception of recent European history. The authors try to overcome the traditional nation-centric model of writing history and to show the importance of developing transnational approach to European history.
Leshow R. N., Kansteiner W., Fogu C., eds.	The Politics of Memory in Postwar Europe	Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press	2006	XI, 366	The collection of essays provides a comparative exploration of the politics of post-World War II memory in seven European countries: Austria, France, Germany, Italy, Poland, Switzerland, and the USSR (Russia). The authors of the book shared two core assumptions: 1) institutionalized forms of memory are important but not all-controlling; 2) leaders exercise only imperfect control over institutional memory.
Levi G., Revel J., eds.	Political Uses of the Past: The Recent Mediterranean Experiences	London; Portland OR: Frank Cass	2022	138	This collective volume addresses some prominent and potentially comparable cases of political and historiographical uses of history in Mediterranean countries. Among others the volume examines the issues of political uses of the past in Spain, Greece, Armenia, and Balkan countries.
Logan W., Reeves K., eds.	Places of Pain and Shame: Dealing with "Difficult Heritage"	London: Routledge	2009	XII, 290	This edition explores sites of "difficult heritage": massacre and genocide sites, wartime internment camps, as well as civil and political prisons, and places of "benevolent interment" (asylums for the migrants, insane, and outcasts). The authors critically examine different sites around the world and evaluate the potentials and pitfalls of each of them.
Macdonald S.	Difficult Heritage: Negotiating the Nazi Past in Nuremberg and Beyond	London, New York: Routledge	2009	XI, 228	The book examines how Nuremberg dealt with its Nazi past after 1945 and how the consistent understanding of the role of the "difficult heritage" of the city took place. The author shows that the contemporary Nuremberg politics of memory focuses on not forgetting the "difficult heritage", while emphasizing the identity of the city as a stronghold of the Holy Roman Empire (with a reference to the consolidating role of the European Union).
Macdonald S.	Memorylands: Heritage and Identity in Europe Today	London, New York: Routledge	2013	XIV, 293	The book investigates the nature of heritage, memory and understandings of the past in today's Europe. Nine chapters of the book cover such themes as: traditions, telling, feeling and selling the past, musealisation, cultural and transcultural heritage, and cosmopolitan memory. The book also offers a wide-range of case-studies from across Europe, which show that Europe is home to a much greater range of ways of making the past present than it was usually realized.
Margalit G.	Guilt, Suffering and Memory: Germany Remembers Its Dead of World War II	Bloomington, IN: Indiana University Press	2010	404	The book examines the ways Germans have remembered World War II since 1945 till the beginning of 2000s. It discusses both the official remembrance ceremonies and the popular attitudes towards the memory of that war. The author argues that post-war remembrance in Germany was a competition of two narratives: the Jewish one about the Holocaust and the "reconciliation narrative".
Pakier M., Strath B., eds.	A European Memory?: Contested Histories and Politics of Remembrance	New York: Berghahn Books	2010	372	This book presents the multiplicity of debates that characterized European visions of and debates about the past at the end of 2000s. Twenty chapters of the volume are divided into two parts. The first part consists of theoretical explorations in European Memory constructs. The second addresses the remembrance of four themes most intensely discussed in academic and political debates: World War II, the Holocaust, Europe's Communist past, and Europe's colonial past.
Zerubavel Y.	Recovered Roots: Collective Memory and the Making of Israeli National Tradition	Chicago; London: The University of Chicago Press	1995	360	The book examines three events that became important in creation of modern Zionism as an ideology and a basis for Israeli national identity: the defence of Masada against the Romans in 73 C.E., the Bar Kokhba revolt of 133-135, and the 1920 battle of Tel Hai. The author shows how, in each of these cases, Israeli memory transformed events that ended in death and defeat into heroic myths and symbols of national revival.
Sider G., Smith G., eds.	Between History and Histories: The Making of Silences and Commemorations	Toronto; Buffalo; London: University of Toronto Press	1997	IX, 314	This book address questions of how commemorations and the silences that surround them come into being and are institutionalized. The authors of essays explain how we commemorate certain events, while silencing others.
